ADESA School children

ADESA wants to improve the independence and autonomy of low-income people in Peru by means of health and education. ADESA have been working in Peru since 1984 in the slums of the northern district of Lima. They are working to provide health services at low cost and to reduce the high rate of infectious diseases through prevention strategies. Their work also aims to improve existing education and create new educational opportunities for children and young people with the desire to provide better expectations for the future.

ADESA have built a new surgery room at their school in Los Rosales in order to provide the children and their families with medical support and especially dental care. The population of Los Rosales and surrounding area is 100,000 people of which only 25% of the working population have a job. Many live in simple huts without water, electricity or sanitation. Presently the area has no dental health care provision at all. ADESA need a complete dental surgery to put in the new surgery room. They then hope to be able to treat 100 children each week. They also plan to establish an oral health education programme in their own school and visiting other surrounding schools twice a year.

Dentaid wish to supply a full surgery to the ADESA project in order that they can properly care for the oral health needs of their community; giving much needed pain relief treatment and oral health education to many children and families living in poverty in the Los Rosales area.
